UTILISE TECHNOLOGY TO IMPROVE YOUR MEETINGS

The meeting room is considered an area where productivity can always be improved. Whatever their purpose, meetings take up a considerable amount of time in the work week, meaning they need to be as effective, efficient and productive as possible. The easiest way of achieving this goal is through the use of technology.

However, achieving this solution is not so easy. Meeting rooms are one of the epicentres of technological faults, with time wasted responding to issues like a faulty projector, poor internet connection, or missing adaptors and cables. With a variety of products and services available on the market, improving productivity in meetings is about utilising the right technology. But where do businesses begin?

Mobile Devices

In today's business world, it's reasonable to say that mobile technology such as laptops, smartphones and tablets is widespread. In order to properly support their users, it is crucial that these devices can easily integrate with any meeting room equipment.

Mobile devices facilitate a more flexible and efficient workplace, serving the needs of the user in a number of diverse contexts and environments. Challenges can arise when there is a meeting room full of people with different smartphones, tablets and laptops running different operating systems.

Ensuring Meeting Room Compatibility

Companies can respond to this issue by ensuring everyone in the meeting has the same kind of device. However, not every company has the means to buy every employee a mobile work device. A better solution is to ensure the meeting room equipment is able to support these different devices and operating systems.

Meeting room equipment should be able to support iOS, Android and Windows without the need to dramatically reconfigure settings or find that you need an extra cable, connector or specialised adaptor. This can be accomplished using wireless or USB technology, which can connect users to a shared screen.

Facilitating Quality Presentations

Any information, video, audio and graphics should also be presented in the same resolution and quality as it appears on the host device. This is particularly important during business presentations and pitches, particularly in the media and marketing industries.

The equipment should also allow several people to share the common screen at the same time for training or participation during the presentation. Productivity is improved further if many participants are able to display their screen on the shared monitor quickly with the click of a button.

The Challenge of Maintaining Optimal Technology

Technology needs to be constantly upgraded and patched to work optimally. This can be a costly challenge for many businesses, especially when meeting room equipment involves web-based interfaces for several meeting spaces, which would ideally be updated remotely by an IT department.

Many companies are overcoming these challenges by using serviced offices, allowing them to utilise meeting rooms with high-quality equipment and high-speed internet, ultimately boosting productivity. Businesses that have their own offices can still benefit from these services by using short-term meeting spaces for important conferences, presentations or pitches.
